Andrew Krywko: Goals In Office

Goal 1: Building upon what's been done

While this year has been an extremely difficult one for every single one of us, the advisors of all of our chapters have done great with keeping TSA chapters afloat, and the state officer team, along with all other adult leaders at the state level, have done extremely well converting this year's conference into a virtual event. When elected, I want to continue improving the development that has been put forward this year. After the conference, I will work with local chapters to get feedback on the conference, helping to improve any future virtual conferences to come. While all of us hope that we don't have to go through this again, using this conference to learn what we could improve if we ever have to face this problem again.

Goal 2: Creating virtual fundraisers

Without an in-person conference this year, we are missing one important aspect of TSA tradition: the fundraiser for the American Cancer Society. However, I plan on working with the officer team to create a digital fundraiser for our partner. With this fundraiser, we could implement ticket prices close to $5 a person, offering rewards such as virtual giftcards. This way, we can still fulfill our promise of providing funds to the ACS, our sister charity organisation.

Goal 3: Creating more digital spirit events

In October of last year, as opposed to the leadership that we as a state were used to, our state officers put together a virtual conference in its place, containing events like break-out sessions, a large chapter events, and daily spirit events. The latter of these was really effective in getting chapters to bond during the socially-distanced conference, and seeing that this was a great morale booster, I wish to implement more of these spirit events throughout the year. From using the state or national theme, to implementing seasonal themes, adding these spirit events throughout the year will be a great way to get chapter spirit up and going again.
